TWAIN MADE PAPER FAMOUS

Virginia City Enterprise, Now Defunct, Printed Some of the Best Work of Great Humorist.

To only the old or middle-aged will there be anything significant in the announcement that the Enterprise newspaper at Virginia City, Nevada, has passed away. The Enterprise was not potent as a mold of public opinion, its circulation was not notable, and outside of the state few people knew of its existence. But it had once one member of the staff who made it famous in his day and who himself later became famous.

It was the Enterprise on which Mark Twain first used that name which afterward became a household word. He had contributed articles from mining camps under the pseudonym of "Josh," but when he joined the staff he adopted as sobriquet "Mark Twain," a reminiscence of his pilot days. As new "strikes" were made the newspaper office was moved first from Genoa to Carson and later to Virginia City.

One can visualize Mark in the Enterprise office of the '60s, his long legs twisted about the tilted chair, the old hat on his great bush of hair, writing some such matter as "Mr. Bloke's Item," swapping stories with Dan De Quille, or listening to the quaint vernacular of visiting miners or prospectors. It was there he began the first of those experiences which were to enrich the literature of the country and to teach a tired world how to laugh. The Enterprise is gone, but so are the Old City Derrick, the Laramie Boomerang, and the Danbury News, at least no one now hears of them since the humorists who made the reputations of those journals have passed away.

OUR MEXICAN POLICY BASED ON HUMANITY

How the President Has Upheld a Small Nation's Right to Control Its Affairs.

RESISTED WAR PRESSURE

Determined That America's Sister Republic Shall Be Permitted to Work Out Its Problem of Freedom and Self-Government.

"President Wilson's faith in democracy, and the unselfishness of the United States in international dealings, have been strikingly expressed in his Mexican policy."

"The President's demand for Mexico is—Justice."

The larger phases of the relations of the United States with Mexico during President Wilson's Administration as well as an interesting and complete narrative of events are presented authoritatively in the Mexican chapter of the Democratic National Text Book, from which these quotations are made:

"Two considerations have animated the President in the formulation of his Mexican policy and have compelled his adherence to it throughout his Administration, namely:

"The firm conviction that all nations, both the weak and the powerful, have the inviolable right to control their internal affairs.

"The belief, established upon the history of the world, that Mexico will never become a peaceful and law-abiding neighbor of the United States until she has been permitted to achieve a permanent and basic settlement of her troubles without outside interference.....

"The Mexican problem in its present form has existed for the American Government ever since our frontier was extended to the Rio Grande. When the people maintained the peace it was because they were forced to do so, and not because justice reigned in the land. Thus it was that the history of Mexico, like the history of every warring people, pressed upon President Wilson's consideration the truth that no permanent good relations could exist between this great Northern Republic and the one immediately South of us until she had been left free to put her house in order, however painful that process might be and whatever the demands it might make upon the forbearance of the United States."

"There was a powerful pressure for war—a terrible war—by a well-armed powerful nation against an unarmed, bankrupt people exhausted by five years of civil strife, but who still retained enough of patriotic feeling to unify them against an invader. It was the old, old question whether the United States should impose a peace on Mexico; whether, for the sake of the interests of a few of its citizens, it should permanently suppress Mexico's uprising toward freedom and self-government."

FOR SERVICES RENDERED NOT PROMISES BROKEN

"I do not doubt that the people of the United States will wish the Democratic party to continue in control of the government. They are not in the habit of rejecting those who have actually served them for those who are making doubtful and conjectural promises of service. Least of all are they likely to substitute those who promised to render them particular services and proved false to that promise for those who have actually rendered those very services."
